Fear the walking dead season 4 episode 10

Go to content I'm bored. It doesn't say that actors are afraid of the boring Walking Dead; Alicia Debnam-Carey made one of the most impressive performances as Alicia on the show so far with this week's Close Your Eyes. It doesn't say that the premise of the show is boring, but that's why this is why I'm still trying to figure out the catchy equivalent of Sharknado but with walkers. I'm just getting to the point - the point I got with the Walking Dead universe several times over the show - where I have to ask, how much of my life can I give to a show that seems to be trapped in a loop of its making? With your eyes closed, Alicia seeks refuge in a house away from a violent storm. It basically cleared the foundation of the four walkers that were inhabited and rids the walls of old pictures depicting a family that was opposite a family that is now dead in mud on the grass. They remind Alicia of the family she once had and who had already met the same fate. On its own, this episode is contained (both in terms of episodic structure and actual setting) examining the character on Alicia dealing with her trauma. In the grand scheme of dead verse, it's another predictable impulse that you choose to turn a dark and stout tone rather than keep the energy moving along. Also, it's just super depression all the time. I can't spend much time with a half-empty type of people, and I don't want to spend a lot of time with half-empty glass types of presentations. This is my ventilation hole now to the half full part of this summary... Close your eyes playing out in one place: home. Alicia physically couldn't leave, as she found when she tried to get the car and the wind knocked her both out of balance and unconscious. The space becomes more restrictive - there are floods downstairs, pedestrians come to the windows to hit, and people lock themselves in the rooms - until they finally have to face what they were running away from. The last episode, we saw Luciana sink the rest of the world by blowing up the music, but as Charlie crept into the house through a locked door, there came a symbolic realization that she couldn't lock herself away because it brings other problems. Charlie likewise sneaks home through Alicia's broken door when she first busted in. Finding the girl who was killed and brought the eagles to the baseball field brings emotions and Alicia has been put on a pause. She tries to leave because she's afraid to kill Charlie if she's left at home with her, but as I mentioned earlier, it doesn't work out well. She wakes up to find herself back at home, where she unleashes a speech about Charlie, who locked herself in a bedroom, about how she trashed and wasted a person, not realizing that Charlie was thinking about suicide. Alicia keeps trying to do the right thing by making sure Charlie's okay, because that's what her mother was going to do. The feeling is all that's left of Alicia from Madison, plus she needs help securing the rest of the windows against the storm. Alicia becomes inclined to kill Charlie again. However, when offered to dry Charlie's jacket from the fire she is making. She thanks when the girl, who is still silent, will not give it up. So Alicia threatens to end up with her, finding a gun -- the same gun Charlie used to kill -- and putting it on Charlie's head, thinking she meant to use it on Alicia. Both trembling and tears, Alicia lets her run back to her room. Charlie, however, after a peek at the family photos saved from Alicia's disinfection, decides to go visit Walker who was stabbed on a tree branch outside her window. Alicia runs and pulls her back just as she gets close enough for her bite dead. (The feed continues on the next page.) Charlie finally breaks her vow of silence when Alicia realizes the gun she was carrying was intended for suicide. Alicia asks why i saved her from the walker, and Alicia doesn't know exactly why. She knows Charlie has to live with what she did, just like Alicia keeps doing, so the two live with their luggage. They also live with each other. At dinner, Charlie reveals that she and her family were on their way to the beach and promenade in Galveston, Texas, when everything changed. She enjoyed reading a lot as she tried to imagine the places listed on the page, but she hasn't found anything yet about Galveston. As the storm's violence increases, so do their internal conflicts. Later that night, the storm blows walkers off the balcony and smashes a window. Charlie was scrambling to save the family photos at home, while Alicia kept explaining that it didn't matter anymore, that no one would come back for them. They are forced to go downstairs when the upper levels become unsafe, but the flooding downstairs continues to rise. They immediately try to return to the outside, but the debris hangs on them, trapping them below. The rear entrance is also restricted, so they are forced to go through it by standing over the containers. Here, in their most besieged country, Charlie admits she doesn't want to die, but she doesn't want to become a walker either. She watched her parents turn and now she can't remember what they looked like. That's why I memorized the old pictures at Charlie's house and then Alicia begs for a gun and shoots her by calling the names of her mother and brother. Her family sees flash before her eyes as she carries the gun to Charlie's head, but she can't bring herself to do it. Everything you feel comes out in sobs. However, Alicia unleashes her anger. Once it's gone, the lock on the basement door is broken, the same walker that was hanging from the tree's fall and the powers open so that it could get out. The next day, Alicia burys the family's bodies and celebrates their graves with a jar full of their photographs. Then Charlie inherits her old - Gun barrel sharpened in blade - and they set off to find the others. Charlie remembers her. While they're driving away, Alicia gives her a beach gift. Charlie closes her eyes as Alicia describes her favorite place, and so, it opens up Charlie's memories of her parents before she turns. It resonated when Charlie said she saw Madison in Alicia, even if Alicia couldn't see her on the downside, finding Victor and Luciana not in the estate, which was destroyed by the storm. Morgan's truck and John and John's bus also overturned without any trace of the residents. Charlie says they should go and find her, but Alicia thinks she's gone and she won't be around to see how bad things get. When Walker (who is neither John nor June) gets out from behind the bus, Alicia retrieves her temporary blade to kill him.
